Being a “Whole Lawyer”: Finding Our Authentic Lawyer Persona

Whether we are extroverted or introverted, prefer speaking or writing, or gravitate toward the courtroom or the boardroom, we all bring tremendous (and different!) assets to the legal profession. As we embark upon new phases of our legal careers, it's important to consider what it means to be a “whole lawyer”. Of course lawyers focus on developing and honing substantive legal knowledge. But it's also essential to tap into what makes us mentally and physically healthy lawyers, so we can perform at our peak—just like scholar-athletes. Professor Heidi K. Brown, author of books about authenticity and personal strength in lawyering, provides tips on how to thrive in the legal profession by capitalizing on inherent strengths and being authentically empowered advocates.
